Character Point of View

Grade 3 Reading Worksheet - Challenge Me

PencilGo

Name _____ Date _____

Circle the answer.

READ THIS FIRST

The Goat and the Otter

High on a rocky mountain lived a goat named Pell. Far below, in a cool green river, lived an otter named Ripple. One spring morning, a storm washed a log down the river. It came to rest in the shallow water at the foot of the mountain. Pell climbed down to look at it, and Ripple swam up to do the same.

"What a sad place you live in," Pell said, peering at the river. "Everything is wet and dripping. You can't see anything but reeds."

Ripple floated on her back and laughed. "Sad? The water is cool and soft. I can slide down the mudbank fifty times a day. Your home is nothing but hard rocks and wind."

Pell stamped a hoof. "From my ledge, I can see three valleys at once! The sun reaches me first every morning."

"And the cold wind reaches you first every night," Ripple said.

They argued until the sun was high. Neither one would give in. At last, a heron who had been standing on one leg stepped forward. "You each think your home is best because it fits you," she said. "Why not visit and see?"

So Pell tried the river. The water soaked his thick coat, and he shivered on the bank. Ripple tried the mountain. The rocks scraped her paws, and the wind stung her eyes. By evening, both were tired and sore.

That night, Pell lay on his ledge and watched the stars. He thought about how Ripple had smiled while she slid down the mud. Ripple floated under the moon. She thought about how proudly Pell had stood on his high rock.

The next morning, they met at the log again. "Your river is not sad," Pell said. "It is just not for me."

"And your mountain is grand," Ripple said. "For a goat."

From then on, they met at the log each week. Each one told stories about home, and each one listened.

1. What is Pell's point of view about the river at first?
   - It would be fun to slide in.
   - It is better than his mountain.
   - It is cool and soft.
   - It is a sad, wet place.

2. What is Ripple's point of view about her own home?
   - It is too crowded with reeds.
   - It is a wonderful place to live.
   - It is much too wet and dripping.
   - It would be better up high.

3. Which detail does Pell give to support his view of the mountain?
   - The rocks scrape against his hooves.
   - The water soaks his thick coat.
   - He can see three valleys from his ledge.
   - The cold wind reaches him first at night.

4. How is the heron's point of view different from Pell's and Ripple's?
   She thinks each home is best for the animal living there.
   She thinks the river is the best home.
   She thinks both homes are unsafe.
   She thinks the mountain is the best home.

5. Whose thoughts does the narrator share on the night after the visits?
   only the heron's only Ripple's both Pell's and Ripple's only Pell's

6. How can you tell the narrator is not one of the characters?
   The narrator calls each animal by name, he, or she.
   The narrator tells only what Pell thinks.
   The narrator is the heron, who watched.
   The narrator says I and we.

7. What makes Pell and Ripple change their views?
   finding a new home that both of them like
   a storm washing the log far away
   the heron telling them which home is best
   trying each other's home and remembering the other's joy

8. Pell says, "It is just not for me." What does he mean?
   The river is a good home, but not for a goat.
   He never wants to see the river again.
   He wants Ripple to move far away.
   He still thinks the river is a sad place.

9. Ripple says, "For a goat." What does this show about her view?
   She wants to move up to the mountain.
   She thinks goats are better than otters.
   She is still angry at Pell.
   She sees the mountain is grand but prefers the river.

10. Pell was "peering at the river." What does peering mean?
    laughing softly shouting loudly swimming quickly looking closely

Scan to get this marked free. No screen time for your child.
Print it · do it in pencil · scan it · PencilGo picks the next sheet.

Character Point of View

Answer Key - Grade 3 Reading Worksheet - Challenge Me

Circle the answer.

READ THIS FIRST

The Goat and the Otter

High on a rocky mountain lived a goat named Pell. Far below, in a cool green river, lived an otter named Ripple. One spring morning, a storm washed a log down the river. It came to rest in the shallow water at the foot of the mountain. Pell climbed down to look at it, and Ripple swam up to do the same.

"What a sad place you live in," Pell said, peering at the river. "Everything is wet and dripping. You can't see anything but reeds."

Ripple floated on her back and laughed. "Sad? The water is cool and soft. I can slide down the mudbank fifty times a day. Your home is nothing but hard rocks and wind."

Pell stamped a hoof. "From my ledge, I can see three valleys at once! The sun reaches me first every morning."

"And the cold wind reaches you first every night," Ripple said.

They argued until the sun was high. Neither one would give in. At last, a heron who had been standing on one leg stepped forward. "You each think your home is best because it fits you," she said. "Why not visit and see?"

So Pell tried the river. The water soaked his thick coat, and he shivered on the bank. Ripple tried the mountain. The rocks scraped her paws, and the wind stung her eyes. By evening, both were tired and sore.

That night, Pell lay on his ledge and watched the stars. He thought about how Ripple had smiled while she slid down the mud. Ripple floated under the moon. She thought about how proudly Pell had stood on his high rock.

The next morning, they met at the log again. "Your river is not sad," Pell said. "It is just not for me."

"And your mountain is grand," Ripple said. "For a goat."

From then on, they met at the log each week. Each one told stories about home, and each one listened.

1. What is Pell's point of view about the river at first?
   - It would be fun to slide in.
   - It is better than his mountain.
   - It is cool and soft.
   - It is a sad, wet place.

2. What is Ripple's point of view about her own home?
   - It is too crowded with reeds.
   - It is a wonderful place to live.
   - It is much too wet and dripping.
   - It would be better up high.

3. Which detail does Pell give to support his view of the mountain?
   - The rocks scrape against his hooves.
   - The water soaks his thick coat.
   - He can see three valleys from his ledge.
   - The cold wind reaches him first at night.

4. How is the heron's point of view different from Pell's and Ripple's?
She thinks each home is best for the animal living there.
She thinks the river is the best home.
She thinks both homes are unsafe.
She thinks the mountain is the best home.

5. Whose thoughts does the narrator share on the night after the visits?
only the heron's only Ripple's both Pell's and Ripple's only Pell's

6. How can you tell the narrator is not one of the characters?
The narrator calls each animal by name, he, or she.
The narrator tells only what Pell thinks.
The narrator is the heron, who watched.
The narrator says I and we.

7. What makes Pell and Ripple change their views?
finding a new home that both of them like
a storm washing the log far away
the heron telling them which home is best
trying each other's home and remembering the other's joy

8. Pell says, "It is just not for me." What does he mean?
The river is a good home, but not for a goat.
He never wants to see the river again.
He wants Ripple to move far away.
He still thinks the river is a sad place.

9. Ripple says, "For a goat." What does this show about her view?
She wants to move up to the mountain.
She thinks goats are better than otters.
She is still angry at Pell.
She sees the mountain is grand but prefers the river.

10. Pell was "peering at the river." What does peering mean?
laughing softly shouting loudly swimming quickly looking closely