Rain on Picnic Day

Arjun and his sister Meera woke up to rain tapping on the window. It was the day of the class picnic at Cedar Park.

Meera groaned and pulled her blanket over her head. "Everything is ruined," she said. "The grass will be soggy, and the sandwiches will get wet."

Arjun jumped out of bed. He pressed his face to the glass and grinned. Fat drops were splashing into the puddles on the sidewalk. Arjun loved puddles more than anything. He had new green rain boots, and he had never worn them outside.

At school, Ms. Patel said the picnic would move to the gym. Meera sighed and slumped in her seat. Arjun thought the gym sounded like a fine place for a picnic. It had a shiny floor and plenty of room to run.

After lunch on blankets in the gym, the rain stopped. Ms. Patel led the class outside for a walk. Arjun splashed through every puddle in his green boots. Meera stepped carefully around each one.

Then Meera spotted a rainbow over the trees. "Look!" she cried. For the first time all day, she smiled.
