A Skate Park or a Garden?

The town of Cedar Falls has a big empty lot on Hill Street. For two years, nothing has been built there. Now the town council must decide what to do with it. Some people want a skate park. Others want a community garden.

Here are the facts. The lot is about the size of two basketball courts. A skate park would cost about eighty thousand dollars to build. A garden would cost about fifteen thousand dollars. The town has saved fifty thousand dollars for the project. The council will vote on May 3.

Many young people support the skate park. Jayden, who is eleven, spoke at the last meeting. "Skating is the best way to stay active," he said. "Right now, kids skate in the library parking lot. That is not safe." Jayden also brought a paper signed by sixty students who want the park. It is true that the library lot is busy. About three hundred cars park there each day.

Other people prefer a garden. Mrs. Chen, a retired teacher, also spoke. "A garden would bring the whole town together," she said. "Fresh vegetables are better than any skate trick." She pointed out that the town has no public garden now. The nearest one is twelve miles away in Pine Grove. She said a garden could also give fresh food to the town food bank.

Some people say skate parks are too loud. Others say gardens are boring. No one can prove which one is more fun. These are opinions, and people will keep arguing about them. But the vote will depend on facts, too. A skate park costs more money than the town has saved.

In my view, the town should build both, one at a time. A garden could open first because it costs less. The skate park could come later, once the town saves more money. That plan would be fair to everyone.
