Text 1: Marcus tossed the ball high in the living room, even though Mom had told him many times to play outside. On the third toss, it bounced off the shelf. The ball was soft, but it was fast.

Text 2: There was a sharp crack. Grandma's blue vase lay on the rug in three pieces. Marcus froze, then looked toward the kitchen, where Mom was humming. Marcus held his breath.

Text 3: He scooped up the pieces and pushed them under the couch. His heart thumped so loudly he was sure Mom could hear it from the other room. Then he sat on the couch and tried to look calm.

Text 4: At dinner, Mom said, "Grandma is coming Saturday. She loves seeing her vase on the shelf." Marcus pushed his peas around and did not take a single bite. Mom asked if he felt okay.

Text 5: That night, Marcus could not sleep. He kept picturing Grandma's face when she saw the empty shelf. She had carried that vase all the way from Mexico. He rolled over again and again.

Text 6: In the morning, he pulled the pieces from under the couch and set them on the kitchen table. His hands were shaking, but he waited for Mom to come downstairs. He had made up his mind.

Text 7: "I broke it," he said before Mom could even sit down. "I was throwing the ball inside. I hid it because I was scared."

Text 8: Mom was quiet for a long moment. Then she picked up one piece and turned it over slowly in her fingers. Marcus waited.

Text 9: "I am sad about the vase," she said, "but I am proud you told me. Hiding it would have made Saturday much harder." Then she gave him a long hug.

Text 10: On Saturday, Marcus showed Grandma the pieces and said he was sorry. Grandma hugged him, and together they glued the vase into a bumpy, cracked, but whole shape. Grandma said she liked it even better now.
