Text 1: Rosa had practiced the word list every night for a month. Her little sister could even say the hardest words, because Rosa spelled them aloud while brushing her teeth. The list had fifty words.

Text 2: On the morning of the school spelling bee, Rosa ate only two bites of toast. She kept checking the clock on the stove, though the bus would not come for twenty minutes. Her mom told her to take a deep breath.

Text 3: In the gym, twelve spellers sat in a row of metal chairs. When Rosa's name was called, her legs felt like noodles as she walked to the microphone. The microphone looked very tall.

Text 4: Her first word was "garden." She spelled it easily and let out a long breath. One by one, other spellers missed words and sat down in the front row. Her teacher gave her a small nod.

Text 5: Soon only Rosa and a fourth grader named Kai were left. Kai bounced on his toes and smiled at the crowd as if he did this every day. Rosa tried to smile too, but her face felt stiff.

Text 6: Rosa's next word was "bicycle." She knew it. She had spelled it a hundred times. But her mind went blank, and she spelled it with an s. The room went very quiet.

Text 7: The bell dinged. Rosa walked back to her seat with her eyes on the floor. Kai spelled "bicycle" correctly and won the trophy.

Text 8: After the bee, Kai came over to her chair. "You were really good," he said. "I missed garden in my first bee last year." He held the trophy under his arm.

Text 9: Rosa looked at him for a moment. Then she laughed. "Garden? Really?" Kai shrugged. "Everybody gets nervous. Next year it could be your turn." She felt her shoulders relax.

Text 10: That night, Rosa taped next year's date to her mirror. Underneath, she wrote one word in big letters: B-I-C-Y-C-L-E. She smiled at it every morning.
