The Sock Mystery

Every morning that week, Rafael found only one sock by his bed. On Monday, a blue sock was gone. On Tuesday, a striped one vanished. By Thursday, he had four lonely socks and no pairs.

"Did you leave them at the pool?" asked his sister, Lucia.

"I didn't go to the pool," Rafael said with a frown.

That night, Rafael set a green sock on the rug. Then he hid behind his door and waited. Soon he heard tiny claws tapping across the floor. A tail swished past the door. When he peeked out, the green sock was gone.

Rafael followed a trail of fuzzy lint down the hall. It led to the laundry room. Pepper, the family's new puppy, lay curled in her basket. She did not lift her head, but one eye opened a crack. Something striped poked out from under her blanket.

Rafael laughed and knelt beside the basket. "So that's where they went," he whispered. He scratched Pepper behind the ears. "Tomorrow I'll buy you a toy of your very own."
