Chalk at Recess

On Monday, a new desk stood next to Owen's in Room 12. A girl named Lucía sat there with her hands folded tight. Ms. Bell introduced her, and Lucía gave a tiny nod. When the class said hello, her cheeks turned pink. She looked down at her shoes.

During math, Ms. Bell explained the problems out loud. Lucía watched the board carefully. She copied the numbers and solved every problem quickly. But when Ms. Bell asked her a question, Lucía only shook her head. She whispered something in Spanish.

At recess, Lucía stood alone near the fence. Owen remembered his first day at a new school two years ago. Nobody had talked to him until lunch. He grabbed a piece of chalk and walked over.

Owen drew a hopscotch board on the blacktop. He pointed at the squares and counted, "One, two, three." Then he handed Lucía the chalk. She smiled for the first time all day. "Uno, dos, tres," she said, writing the numbers in neat rows.

By the end of recess, three more kids had joined the game. Lucía hopped all the way to ten without stepping on a line. Everyone cheered.

The next morning, Lucía walked into Room 12 holding two pieces of chalk. She set one on Owen's desk. "For you," she said carefully. "Thank you." Owen grinned. He decided to teach her the English word for every color in the box.

1. Why did Lucía shake her head when Ms. Bell asked her a question?
   - She was still learning English.
