Reading Fluency Review

Grade 3 Reading Worksheet

Name _____ Date _____

Circle the answer.

READ THIS FIRST

Priya Reads the Announcements

On Monday, Ms. Ortiz picked Priya to read the morning announcements. Priya would speak into the microphone in the school office. Every class would hear her voice.

"Practice tonight," Ms. Ortiz said. "Read slowly, and let the commas help you."

At home, Priya read the page to her little brother, Dev. She rushed through the first part. Dev frowned. "I can't understand you," he said. "You sound like a race car!"

Priya laughed and tried again. This time she paused at each comma. She stopped at each period. When a line ended with a question mark, she let her voice rise. Dev nodded and clapped.

On Tuesday morning, Priya's hands felt shaky. She sat down in the office and took a deep breath. Then she began.

"Good morning, Lincoln School! Today is picture day, so please wear your best smile. The library will be closed at lunch. Do you have a book to return? Please bring it back by Friday."

Halfway through, Priya read "lunch" as "launch." She stopped. That did not make sense! She went back and read the sentence again the right way.

When she finished, the principal gave her a thumbs-up. Later, Priya walked past her old kindergarten room. A small voice called out, "You sounded like a real reporter!" Priya smiled all the way back to class.

1. Where should a reader pause in this sentence?
   Today is picture / day, so please wear your / best smile.
   Today is / picture day, so please / wear your best smile.
   Today is picture day, so / please wear your best / smile.
   Today is picture day, / so please wear / your best smile.

2. Dev says, "You sound like a race car!" How should a reader say his words?
   in a sad, shaky voice in a lively, joking voice in a calm, flat voice
   in a soft, sleepy voice

3. What should a reader's voice do at the end of "Do you have a book to return?"
   drop low, because it ends a sad part
   get louder, because it is a warning
   stop, because the announcements are over
   rise, because it asks the listeners something

4. Priya read "lunch" as "launch." How did she know she made a mistake?
   The principal gave her a sign.
   Ms. Ortiz stopped the announcements.
   Dev called out and told her.
   The sentence no longer made sense.

5. What did Priya do after she misread a word?
   She started over from the very first line.
   She skipped ahead to the end of the page.
   She kept reading and hoped no one noticed.
   She went back and reread the sentence.

6. Ms. Ortiz said, "Read slowly, and let the commas help you." Why is that good advice?
   Commas tell a reader to start the line over.
   Listeners can follow each part of the message.
   Slow reading makes every word sound louder.
   The announcements will end much faster.

7. In "That did not make sense!" which word should a reader stress?
   not sense That make

8. How should a reader say "Good morning, Lincoln School!"?
   quiet and slow, like telling a secret
   cheerful and clear, like a friendly hello
   flat, with no feeling at all
   puzzled, with the voice going up

9. How can a reader break announcements into parts?
   anno-unce-ments an-nounce-ments a-nnoun-cements ann-oun-cements

10. Reread the last paragraph. What does the small voice tell you about Priya's reading?
    She read clearly and with expression.
    She read too fast to be understood.
    She read only the first few lines.
    She read in a voice nobody could hear.

Scan to get this marked free. No screen time for your child.
Print it · do it in pencil · scan it · PencilGo picks the next sheet.

Reading Fluency Review

Answer Key - Grade 3 Reading Worksheet

Circle the answer.

READ THIS FIRST

Priya Reads the Announcements

On Monday, Ms. Ortiz picked Priya to read the morning announcements. Priya would speak into the microphone in the school office. Every class would hear her voice.

"Practice tonight," Ms. Ortiz said. "Read slowly, and let the commas help you."

At home, Priya read the page to her little brother, Dev. She rushed through the first part. Dev frowned. "I can't understand you," he said. "You sound like a race car!"

Priya laughed and tried again. This time she paused at each comma. She stopped at each period. When a line ended with a question mark, she let her voice rise. Dev nodded and clapped.

On Tuesday morning, Priya's hands felt shaky. She sat down in the office and took a deep breath. Then she began.

"Good morning, Lincoln School! Today is picture day, so please wear your best smile. The library will be closed at lunch. Do you have a book to return? Please bring it back by Friday."

Halfway through, Priya read "lunch" as "launch." She stopped. That did not make sense! She went back and read the sentence again the right way.

When she finished, the principal gave her a thumbs-up. Later, Priya walked past her old kindergarten room. A small voice called out, "You sounded like a real reporter!" Priya smiled all the way back to class.

1. Where should a reader pause in this sentence?
   Today is picture / day, so please wear your / best smile.
   Today is / picture day, so please / wear your best smile.
   Today is picture day, so / please wear your best / smile.
   Today is picture day, / so please wear / your best smile.

2. Dev says, "You sound like a race car!" How should a reader say his words?
   in a sad, shaky voice in a lively, joking voice in a calm, flat voice
   in a soft, sleepy voice

3. What should a reader's voice do at the end of "Do you have a book to return?"
   drop low, because it ends a sad part
   get louder, because it is a warning
   stop, because the announcements are over
   rise, because it asks the listeners something

4. Priya read "lunch" as "launch." How did she know she made a mistake?
   The principal gave her a sign.
   Ms. Ortiz stopped the announcements.
   Dev called out and told her.
   The sentence no longer made sense.

5. What did Priya do after she misread a word?
She started over from the very first line.
She skipped ahead to the end of the page.
She kept reading and hoped no one noticed.
She went back and reread the sentence.

6. Ms. Ortiz said, "Read slowly, and let the commas help you." Why is that good advice?
Commas tell a reader to start the line over.
Listeners can follow each part of the message.
Slow reading makes every word sound louder.
The announcements will end much faster.

7. In "That did not make sense!" which word should a reader stress?
not sense That make

8. How should a reader say "Good morning, Lincoln School!"?
quiet and slow, like telling a secret
cheerful and clear, like a friendly hello
flat, with no feeling at all
puzzled, with the voice going up

9. How can a reader break announcements into parts?
anno-unce-ments an-nounce-ments a-nnoun-cements ann-oun-cements

10. Reread the last paragraph. What does the small voice tell you about Priya's reading?
She read clearly and with expression.
She read too fast to be understood.
She read only the first few lines.
She read in a voice nobody could hear.