The Lost Mitten

Nora lost her red mitten on the way to school. She looked in her bag and under her desk, but it was gone. At recess she saw a little boy with one red mitten on his hand and one bare, shaking hand. Nora almost said, “That is mine!” Then she looked at his cold fingers. The next day she brought him her other red mitten. “Now you have a pair,” she said.

1. What lesson does this story teach? How do you know?

2. Would you have done what Nora did? Explain your answer with the story.

1. What lesson does this story teach? How do you know?

Model answer: It teaches that helping someone matters more than keeping something, because Nora gave away her other mitten. (Any full sentence that restates the question and uses the story is right.)

2. Would you have done what Nora did? Explain your answer with the story.

Model answer: Yes, because the boy's fingers were bare and cold, and Nora saw that he needed the mitten more. (Any full sentence that restates the question and uses the story is right.)
