Bao's Torn Drum

The spring concert at Maple Creek School was one hour away. Bao waited in the music room with his class. He played the big drum, and he had practiced every day for a month.

Bao lifted the drum from its stand. His heart sank. The top of the drum had a long tear in it! When he tapped it, it made a flat buzzing sound.

Bao did not give up. He ran to find Mr. Ortiz, the music teacher. Mr. Ortiz looked at the drum and rubbed his chin. "We have an old drum in the storage closet," he said. "It might be dusty, but it should work."

Bao and his friend Elsie dug through the closet. Behind a pile of music stands, they found the old drum. Elsie wiped it clean with a cloth. Bao tightened the screws on the sides until the top was firm.

That evening, Bao stood on the stage under the bright lights. He played every beat right on time. When the song ended, the crowd clapped loudly. Bao smiled at Elsie from across the stage.
