The Paper Boat Race

Every June, the town of Willow Bend held a paper boat race on Clover Creek. Kids lined up on the little wooden bridge with their boats.

Ivy had folded her boat from blue paper. She was sure it would win. But when she set it on the water, it soaked up the creek. In a minute, the boat sagged and sank.

Ivy's cheeks turned pink. She wanted to run home. Instead, she watched the other boats float away. One boat, made by a boy named Omar, bobbed along without getting wet. "How does yours stay dry?" Ivy asked.

Omar smiled. "I rubbed an old candle all over the paper," he said. "The wax keeps the water out."

Ivy thanked him and got to work. She folded a new boat and rubbed it with a candle from the craft table. Then she waited for the next race.

This time, her boat zipped under the bridge and past the big rock. It came in third place. Ivy cheered as loudly as Omar did.
