Circle the weakest ending for each paragraph.

1. Paragraph: "Camels survive in deserts with help from their bodies. Their humps store fat for energy. Thick eyelashes keep out blowing sand." Which ending is weakest?

   From humps to eyelashes, camels have what they need to survive in deserts.

   Humps and eyelashes help camels live in harsh deserts.

   Camels have thick eyelashes that keep out sand.

   With fat for energy and lashes against sand, camels are built for the desert.

2. Paragraph: "Our school should start a coding club. Coding teaches problem solving. Members could build games together." Which ending is weakest?

   Building games and solving problems make coding club a smart idea.

   A coding club would help students solve problems and have fun.

   The club could also visit a science fair in the spring.

   For these reasons, our school should give a coding club a try.

3. Paragraph: "Sea otters hold paws while they sleep. This keeps them from drifting apart. Some wrap themselves in seaweed too." Which ending is weakest?

   Holding on helps sea otters stay together through the night.

   Sea otters have the thickest fur of any animal.

   Sea otters have smart ways to stay safe while they rest.

   Whether holding paws or using seaweed, otters stay close as they sleep.

4. Paragraph: "The town library now lends tools. Neighbors can borrow ladders and saws for free. Fewer people have to buy tools they use only once." Which ending is weakest?

   Ladders are also useful for painting a house.

   By sharing tools, the library helps the whole town.

   Lending tools saves neighbors money and clutter.

   A tool library gives neighbors what they need without buying it.
