The Bike Repair Station (fictional)

Last spring, the Maple Street Library added something new outside its front door. It was a bike repair station. The station is a metal stand with a pump and tools on short cables. Anyone can use it for free, even without a library card.

Before the station opened, riders with a flat tire had few choices. The nearest bike shop is two miles away. Many children walked their bikes home. Some waited for a parent to pick them up.

Now riders can fix small problems right away. The pump fits most tires. A wrench and two screwdrivers hang beside it. A sign shows how to fix a loose chain in four steps.

The librarians counted how often people used the station. In the first month, about forty riders stopped to use the pump. By the third month, the count had grown to more than ninety. Mr. Ortiz, one of the librarians, said many riders come inside afterward to look at books.

The station is painted bright green. It stands next to the bike rack and a bench. Some riders sit on the bench and wait while a friend pumps a tire.

The library plans to add a second pump next year.

1. Claim: "The station is popular." Evidence: "By the third month, the count had grown to more than ninety." Which explanation connects them?
   - The count shows that the bike shop closed during those months.
   - Ninety riders shows that the station needs a second pump right now.
   - The count more than doubled, so more people chose the station.

2. Claim: "The station is useful." Evidence: "A wrench and two screwdrivers hang beside it." Which explanation connects them?
   - The tools show that riders must walk to a bike shop.
   - Riders can fix small problems themselves with these tools.
   - The tools are there so librarians can fix riders' bikes for them.

3. Claim: "Riders had few good choices before the station." Evidence: "The nearest bike shop is two miles away." Which explanation connects them?
   - Riders could roll their bikes to the shop in a minute.
   - Riders had to go far to get help with a flat tire.
   - The shop was far away, so riders never fixed their tires.

4. Claim: "The station was a good idea." Evidence: "Mr. Ortiz said many riders come inside afterward to look at books." Which explanation connects them?
   - The station was a good idea because Mr. Ortiz uses it every day.
   - Riders come inside only to ask Mr. Ortiz for a library card to use the pump.
   - The station brings riders into the library, where they look at books.
